Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Oceanography in the United States: Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on Oceanography of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, Eighty-Sixth Congress, Second Session On the right is Mr. Laro, who has been trying to pull together all of the various activities and programs into a coordinated whole and to prepare a 5-year program insofar as the Weather Bureau s maritime meteorology program is concerned. Mr. Miller. If you would like to have those men at the table with you, we will make room for them. Mr. Reichelderfer. It will not be necessary at the present stage. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Under the statutes and executive orders governing meteorological services provided by the u.s. Government, the Weather Bureau is responsible for collecting essential weather reports from the oceans, the Great Lakes and other bodies of water in which the United States has a meteorological interest, and for preparing weather maps, climatological charts, storm warnings and other weather advisories for the high seas and water areas within or contiguous to the United States and its territories. The Weather Bureau is responsible also for meteorological research in support of ocean weather services and in particular, for boundary zone research involving the oceans and the atmosphere in their direct relations to weather and climate. The importance Of scientific studies into the relationships between atmosphere and oceans is evident in many Of the meteorological phenomena that determine in large measure man s activities and welfare. Most Of the water that falls on the continents as rain or snow comes from moisture evaporated from the oceans. Many of the severe storms which bring destruction as well as beneficial precipitation to land areas are generated...
