Excerpt from Albany Medical Annals, Vol. 36: Journal of the Alumni Association of the Albany Medical College; May, 1915 In order to arrive at an early diagnosis of cerebral tumor, an accurate knowledge and a correct interpretation of its symptoms are indispensable. While it would be superfluous to discuss at length the various symptoms of tumor of the brain, a general survey of their evolution and a brief reference to the clinical significance of some of them cannot well be omitted. In rare cases a cerebral tumor may be so situated as to give rise to no symptoms whatever and be discovered with surprise at the autopsy. This is exceptional, however, and in the vast majority of cases the symptoms appear early and soon give evidence of severe cerebral disorder. The symptoms of cerebral tumor may be divided into (a) general symptoms common to all varieties and to all localizations, and local symptoms which vary with the situation of the tumor.
