Excerpt from The West American Scientist, Vol. 8: An Illustrated Monthly Magazine, for Reference and Study; July, 1893 On the last day of 1878 he left the Green Mountain State, with his wife and two sons, John Heman Orcutt and the writer, arriv ing in San Diego, California, the 18th of January, 1879. The transition from the snow clad hills of Vermont to the perennial summers of California was thoroughly appreciated, and many dis advantages resulting from changed surroundings were borne with patience. He was naturally a strong man, of active temperament, with an inventive, investigating mind. While his New England farm life inclined him to agricultural pursuits, yet an inherent mechanical taste led him into the building profession for a time.
