A full and clear expression of this sentiment was evoked from him by the tidings of the great battle that tried, more severely than it had been tried since Albuera, that British courage, which, to use his own words, is never so sedate and stubborn as towards the close of a doubtful and murderous day. These were the terms, in which he wrote, with the gazette containing the account of Inkerman on the table before him: The interest excited by the war is as great as that which in my boyish days used to be excited by the Duke of Wellingtons operations. I am well pleased on the whole. It is impossible not to regret so many brave men, and to feel for the distress...
